A HISTORY OF THE FILSON CLUB

Read before the Club, April 3, 1922

The Filson Club was organized May 15, 1884, in Louisville. From the standpoint of continuous existence it is the oldest historical association in Kentucky, and one of the oldest in the Middle West. The thirty-one books of Kentucky history written by its members and printed as Filson Club Publications are well known among students of national and Kentucky history and can be found in many of the large libraries in the country. These Publications, however, represent only one phase of work accomplished by the Club. Other activities are shown by the papers written for the Club and by sundry materials gathered by members and now preserved in its Archives.

Historical societies in other states and cities have done much good work, but few, if any, were handicapped as has been The Filson Club in not owning a home of its own. A Filson Club building and money to maintain it would have encouraged even greater activities among the members and resulted in greater contributions to the Archives. Because the Club had no fireproof building much material in Kentucky pertaining to the State's history has passed into the hands of libraries and historical societies in other states. Its chief activity has been the encouragement of research work and the issuing of Publications. These Publications have given the Club a position among the best historical societies in America.

Historical societies have been organized from time to time in Kentucky for the purpose of gathering material, but they were short lived and such materials as they had collected were dissipated. Most of the pioneers who made early Kentucky history were then dead and gone, and even those who had heard them tell of the exploits of themselves and their contemporaries, were long past middle age and were rapidly dying out. Men like Dr. Lyman C. Draper had been holding interviews with pioneers and their families for many years, obtaining such written evidence as they were able to gather, with the purpose of writing one or more works dealing with those stirring events and the active, hardy people of pioneer times. Dr. Draper's wonderful collection of material long ago passed into the hands of the Wisconsin State Historical Society.

Much, if not most, of the material that was then gathered was collected by non-residents of Kentucky and removed from the State. Some Kentuckians began to recognize that it was high time the descendants of those who made the Mississippi River instead of the Appalachian Mountains the western boundary of our "Thirteen United States," and who built up the grand old Commonwealth, should bestir themselves and begin to collect and save what was left.

Accordingly, on May 15, 1884, Reuben T. Durrett, Richard H. Collins, William Chenault, John Mason Brown, Basil W. Duke, George M. Davie, James S. Pirtle, Thomas W. Bullitt, Alexander P. Humphrey and Thomas Speed, ten of the leading spirits of Louisville, met at the residence of Colonel Reuben Thomas Durrett—202 East Chestnut Street, at the southeast corner of Brook—and organized an association for the purpose of collecting and preserving Kentucky history. Colonel Durrett, the chief instigator of this movement, was a journalist, lawyer, a man of affairs, and a student of Kentucky history. He was elected president, with Thomas Speed secretary and E. T. Halsey treasurer.

The organization was named The Filson Club. It was so called in honor of John Filson who, one hundred years before, in 1784, published the first history of Kentucky—The Discovery, Settlement and Present State of Kentucke. The first paper read before the Club was by Colonel Durrett, and with equal appropriateness an enlargement of this paper was its first Publication—JOHN FILSON, The First Historian of Kentucky, An Account of His Life and Writings.

For the benefit of new and prospective members Colonel Durrett published the following synopsis of the career of John Filson:

"The Filson Club is an historical and literary association of ladies and gentlemen, located in Louisville, Kentucky. At its first meeting the association was named The Filson Club, in honor of John Filson who was the author of the first history and the first map of Kentucky. Filson's history, a quaint little volume of 118 octavo pages, entitled Kentucke, was published at Wilmington, Delaware, in 1784, and his map appeared in Philadelphia the same year. The book and the map have now become very scarce, and when sold bring high prices.

History of the Club

"John Filson was a Pennsylvanian by birth, and was born on the Brandywine, probably in 1747. His education, though below the standard of modern times, was sufficient to qualify him for surveyor, school-teacher and author. He must have known something of Greek, Latin and French, as he used a word from each of these languages in giving a name to the town first established where Cincinnati now stands. He laid out a town there in 1788 and named it Losantiville. This name seems to have been made up of the initial L for Licking, the Latin os for mouth, the Greek anti for opposite to, and the French ville for the city, meaning all together the city opposite to the mouth of the Licking River. The name of Losantiville disappeared after the death of Filson, and was succeeded by Cincinnati.

"Filson probably came to Kentucky in 1782 as one of the host of adventurers who sought lands here to be paid for with the paper money of Virginia issued during the Revolutionary War. In 1783 he located in Fayette County 12,368½ acres and in Jefferson County 1,500 acres, making a total of 13,868½ acres. He also located lands in the Illinois country, but how many acres or where situated cannot now be ascertained because of the burning of records at Vincennes in 1814.

"While Filson was roaming over the country in search of lands, he was also gathering information for his history and map of Kentucky. He was constantly thrown with Daniel Boone, Levi Todd, James Harrod, Christopher Greenup, John Cowan, William Kennedy, and others who hunted game and fought Indians over the whole country and were well acquainted with every part of it. It is said of Boone that he was so perfect a woodsman that he could walk up and down a long creek or river and then tell every stream that came into it, and designate every peculiarity on both banks. From such men as these Filson got the facts for his history and map, and hence they were wonderful productions for their day. In his history he inserted the biography, or rather the autobiography, of Daniel Boone, which not only secured the immortality of the old pioneer but made the first and most valuable chapter in early Kentucky history. On his map were laid down all the forts or stations which shielded the pioneers from the Indians, and it is not too much to say that no one can at this day properly understand the early history of Kentucky without Filson's history and map.

The Filson Club

“While he was at work upon his town of Losantiville in 1788, he went with a surveying and exploring party to the Great Miami River. After ascending this stream some miles he became separated from his party, and he was never seen afterward. Search was made for him, but nothing of his remains was ever found. Neither did intelligence of him ever come from any Indian tribe into which he might have fallen by capture. Whether a straggling Indian slew him or a wild animal made way with him, or his own exhausted heart ceased to beat, may never be known. The grand old sycamores of the Miami Valley beneath which he disappeared have told no story of the manner of his departure.”

Six meetings of the Club were held in 1884, at varying intervals. In February, 1885, the time for regular meetings was agreed upon—the first Monday night of every month, except July, August and September, the summer vacation. Nine regular meetings have been held every year since then, on the nine specified Monday nights, though special meetings have occasionally been called.

The Club was incorporated on October 6, 1891. Its purpose is thus set forth in one of the articles of incorporation: “The principal place of business of this corporation is Louisville, Kentucky. The general nature of the business to be transacted is the collection and preservation and publication of historic matter pertaining to the State of Kentucky and adjacent states; and the cultivation of a taste for historic inquiry and study among its members. The Club shall have power to collect, maintain and preserve a library and a museum, and to acquire suitable grounds and buildings in which to place them.”

As to qualifications for membership, anyone interested in Kentucky history was then, and still is, eligible. Preparing a paper for the Club never was obligatory.

From 1884 to 1913 meetings were held in Colonel Durrett’s library at his residence, the main feature being a prepared paper, a set lecture or an informal talk, followed by an open discussion of the subject, and, frequently, by personal reminiscences. Then a closing recess, as it were, took place; all present became Colonel Durrett’s personal guests. Cider was served and the gentlemen who smoked were supplied with “Filson Club” cigars made by a member of the Club.

History of the Club

Colonel Durrett's home was the depository and headquarters for the Club from its beginning and continued as such for twenty-eight years until his death in 1913. After his death the Club's Archives were transferred to the private library of R. C. Ballard Thruston, in the Columbia Building, where they are carefully preserved and made available to the public.

The meetings in Colonel Durrett's library were, of course, open only to members, personally invited guests, and representatives of the press. Since his death all meetings except those in January have been in the Louisville Free Public Library and were open to the public. The first of these January meetings was held in 1914, when the Club was the guest of Bennett H. Young in his residence on Ormsby Avenue. Since that year both members and their personally invited friends have been, on each first Monday in January, the guests of Vice-President R. C. Ballard Thruston in his library where the Club's portraits, papers, books and relics are housed. At these meetings the social feature, which in Colonel Durrett's time was made so attractive, continues to add its charm and interest, and those attending are given an opportunity to look over the latest additions to the Archives.

Down to 1913 formal records of meetings were not kept but short notes were made and used as memoranda for a verbal report at the succeeding meeting. Neither notes nor minutes prior to 1913 are now in the Archives of the Club. Membership lists, however, were compiled every year and are preserved.

Ever since the organization of the Club the Louisville newspapers have been liberal in publishing notices of the meetings, giving the title of the subject to be presented and discussed, and the day following a meeting each has printed a more or less detailed account of the proceedings, if the topic was of general interest.

The Centennial of Kentucky, June 1, 1892, was the first big event celebrated by the Club. It was elaborately observed by a public meeting at Macauley's Theatre in the morning, followed by a banquet to members and guests at the Galt House in the evening. The speeches delivered were carefully prepared and are given in full in Publication No. 7: THE CENTENARY OF KENTUCKY.

Another significant celebration was the Club's silver jubilee held in Colonel Durrett's library, May 15, 1909. Addresses were made by Zachary F. Smith, Alfred Pirtle, J. Stoddard Johnston and

The Filson Club

Bennett H. Young. On that occasion Colonel Durrett was presented with a life-size portrait of himself, painted by Aurelius C. Revanaugh.

Colonel Durrett was born January 22, 1824, and therefore was in his eighty-sixth year when the Club celebrated its silver jubilee in 1909. He not only was one of its founders, but the real founder—the father of the Club—and its president from its foundation until his death on September 16, 1913. His library was his paradise; Kentucky history was his hobby. The annual dues were $3.00, but that was not sufficient to pay for the annual Publication which each member received. The deficit was sometimes borne by the author of the book, but usually by Colonel Durrett, whose expenditures in financing the Club exceeded $1000.00 a year—a sum he cheerfully paid.

He had long hoped a Filson Club building would some day be procured for the preservation of his library and the Club's Archives and that the collections would grow and develop into a Mecca for students of the history of Kentucky and the Ohio Valley, and stand as a memorial to the men and women whose lives and deeds made possible the achievements of their successors. He offered to give his library to the Club if a suitable building for housing it would be procured.

In 1896 he had advocated the raising of funds to purchase the Custom House (now the Courier-Journal Building) at Third and Liberty streets, and at a later date he tried to encourage the purchase of what was then the Norvin Green residence (now the Young Women's Christian Association) at Second and Broadway, promising in each instance that he would donate his library should the building be procured, made fireproof, and devoted to the collection and preservation of historical material. But the aim was too high and the Club was not able to effect either purchase.

More than once he remarked that "a few of our members do the work and the rest help make the meetings pleasant and attractive." Spurred by the keen interest of the few he, as late as June, 1912, expressed his intention of leaving his library to the Louisville Free Public Library which, since 1908, had occupied a well-equipped modern fireproof building.

When left alone he evidently reflected that his library, which he had spent years collecting and which he loved as a child, might be dissipated and the best of it find its way into private hands, as had been the case with the archives of some of the earlier historical societies on their discontinuance. He feared that any public library controlled by a city government might at some time be dominated by unscrupulous politicians. He felt convinced that in Louisville and Kentucky there was a great lack of interest in the collecting and preserving of history. The only other state-wide historical society in Kentucky—the Kentucky State Historical Society, at Frankfort—was then making little or no progress. Except for the persistent efforts of Mrs. Jennie C. Morton, the regent, that society probably would have passed out of existence shortly after it was reorganized in 1896.

So a few months before his death, negotiations were entered into which resulted in the sale of the Durrett Library to the University of Chicago. Several conditions were attached; among them that it be housed in a fireproof building or room, that it remain intact, and that it be called "The Durrett Collection."

When the sale became known in Louisville, it was a sad blow to the Louisville Free Public Library, for the board had refrained from buying many rare and valuable books because copies of them were among the 30,000 volumes owned by Colonel Durrett which they expected to acquire at his death.

The Filson Club's property was, of course, not included in the sale of the Durrett library. No separate list of the Club's books and other belongings had been kept. Everything presented to Colonel Durrett for his library and for the Club and all books and magazines received as exchanges were shelved with his books, and, not being specifically marked, went with his library to the University of Chicago. Thus much of the Club's valuable material passed into the hands of the university because there was no record or other means of identification.

A few years after the sale a member discovered among the documents that had been shipped to Chicago four marked as the property of The Filson Club—four original orderly books containing the records of General Anthony Wayne's expedition against the Shawnee Indians in 1794-96—and they were returned. On another occasion seven volumes of early court and surveyor's records of Jefferson County were found among the books delivered to the university and they, too, were returned to their official keepers.

Since Colonel Durrett's death the Archives have been in the custody of Mr. Thruston, who at his own expense not only houses the Club's books, documents and other belongings, but also carefully marks and lists and separately shelves them.

It is likely that if Colonel Durrett had offered to sell his library to Louisville, the city or some of its citizens would have purchased the collection and presented it to the Public Library or to The Filson Club. Be that as it may, the Durrett Collection was neither given nor sold to The Filson Club, nor to any other historical society in Kentucky because none owned a fireproof building devoted to history.

Kentucky's annals have contributed more to the early history of the Middle West than have the annals of any other state. Nevertheless many of the other states have gathered and deposited, and are still gathering and depositing, in their archives more original material on Kentucky than Kentucky itself. The largest collections gathered in Kentucky were those of Draper and of Durrett, and both have left the State.

From the time of its origin down to 1913 the Club was to a very great extent dependent on Colonel Durrett. During those many years The Filson Club was, in a sense, his club. That dependence began to react after his death and to arouse the membership to a realization of the necessity of running a less private and more public association. In 1914 the Club began to consider the framing of a new constitution and the adopting of new by-laws. Because of the World War and the business conditions throughout the country that followed, it was deemed best to attempt no radical changes for a while. The membership now feels that the time for such changes is rapidly approaching. Among other projects contemplated is the acquiring of a building.

Since Colonel Durrett's death the usual number of meetings has been held every year, but they were at the Louisville Free Public Library, open to the public and therefore without the charming social features that were characteristic of those held in his home. The January meetings, however, as already stated, are different. They are intended not only as "recurrences" of the Durrett meetings, but are also arranged for the purpose of familiarizing the members with the Club's property.

Since 1913 many original papers have been read, five new Filson Club Publications have been published, and some material has been added to the Archives. The dues have been changed to $2.00 a year, and the money used toward defraying the general expense of the

History of the Club

Club. Every officer contributes his work; and has done so since the beginning of the organization. The Publications issued since Colonel Durrett's death have been financed by the author of the book or by some other member.

On November 19, 1918, the anniversary of the birth of General George Rogers Clark was celebrated. On April 24, 1921, the Club made a pilgrimage to the sites of some of the old forts or stations on Beargrass Creek, and thus inaugurated visits to unmarked historic places for the purpose of arousing interest in them. Research work is being done along various lines of Kentucky history and the preparation of more papers and Publications continues.

Much Kentucky history which otherwise might have been lost forever is preserved in the Club's thirty-one Publications and in its many papers. From the standpoint of its Publications and papers the Club has proved a success. The growth of its Archives, compared to its activities in the various lines of original research, has not been a proportionate success. This is due to lack of sufficient space for the preservation and display of a library and museum, which display in turn would have resulted in the acquiring of more books and relics and other material bearing on Kentucky history. When the Club has procured a building of its own, it will be in a position to increase its activities, influence and usefulness.

Regardless of the result and character of the future activities of The Filson Club, the thirty-one Publications issued and the many papers prepared by members from 1884 to 1922 will ever stand as a monument to Kentucky and the historical society founded by Colonel Reuben T. Durrett.

FILSON CLUB PUBLICATIONS

The Club's activities in the field of publishing history have gone beyond the expectations of the charter members and many of the others who followed. Thirty-one books of original matter on Kentucky history, written by members, have been issued as Filson Club Publications. Other original papers on local and state history, also written for the Club and read at its meetings, are still unpublished. Selections from these papers will be printed from time to time.

The thirty-one Publications are monographs varying from seventy-five to 300 pages, except one, which is a book of 545 pages. The average is about 225 pages. They were printed for the purpose of making more easily available the material gathered by the members who did the research work and prepared the manuscripts. These Publications have been favorably reviewed by the press and carefully studied by historians and others interested in the early Middle West.

Colonel Theodore Roosevelt was among the first historians to visit the large private library of Colonel Durrett shortly after the Club was organized and Colonel Durrett became the custodian of its Archives. In the preface to The Winning of the West, published in 1889, Colonel Roosevelt says: "For original matter connected with Kentucky, I am greatly indebted to Colonel Reuben T. Durrett, of Louisville, the founder of The Filson Club, which has done much admirable work of late years. . . . I am also under great obligation to Colonel John Mason Brown of Louisville, another member of The Filson Club." To his chapter entitled "Kentucky Until the End of the Revolution" Colonel Roosevelt adds in a footnote: "I cannot forbear again commenting on the really admirable historic work now being done by Messrs. Brown, Durrett, Speed, and other members of The Louisville Filson Club." At that time (1888) only four Publications had been issued by the Club, and all of them are cited in The Winning of the West.

The Filson Club Publications are cited by many writers. In fact nearly every well prepared book or paper bearing directly or indirectly on the early history of Kentucky or the Middle West, published since about 1900, quotes from or cites one or more of The Filson Club Publications. As authority in its particular field of history each book ranks among the highest. The Club proposes to maintain that high standard.

The Publications are of interest to the casual reader of Kentucky history as well as to the careful student. School teachers frequently use selections from them for readings or recitations. Recently one of them—THE POLITICAL CLUB—was dramatized by Mrs. W. T. Lafferty, a member of The Filson Club, and Miss Frances Marsh, of the University of Kentucky. It was presented for the first time in May, 1921, before the meeting of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs then in session at Danville. Thus in many ways do the Club's books arouse an interest in history—one of the purposes for which they were published.

All the Publications are limited editions; all are bound in paper cover, except No. 30 and No. 32, some copies of which are bound in paper, others in green cloth, and No. 31, all of which are in green cloth. These books are not for sale in the commercial sense, but copies left beyond the requirements of the Club for its members, its exchanges with other historical associations, and for gifts, are sold at about cost price. All the Publications are from the press of John P. Morton and Company, Louisville, except No. 29 and the first edition of No. 1. For information regarding prices write to The Secretary, The Filson Club, Louisville.

FILSON CLUB PAPERS

1884-1922

The following list, heretofore not published, gives the titles of papers prepared for The Filson Club, read at one of the meetings and deposited in the Club's Archives. This list includes the papers in Filson Club Publications No. 1 to No. 32.

Papers read before the Club but not permanently deposited in the Archives are not included. Some of the manuscripts read prior to 1917 were withdrawn from the Archives and submitted by their authors to magazines or newspapers, but no record was kept of the time or place of their appearance in print. The Secretary will be glad to have his attention called to any article in print designated as a paper read before the Club prior to 1917.

All papers read before the Club since 1917 are in the Archives, and, if published, a notation shows when and where printed.

A set lecture or an informal talk, instead of an original paper, constituted the main feature of many of the Club's meetings. These lectures and talks were instructive and entertaining and did much toward promoting an interest in Kentucky history. They were, however, not preserved in manuscript or any other form and therefore no copies or synopses of them appear in the Archives.

In addition to the papers here listed there are other manuscripts in the Archives, such as old letters, diaries, journals and drawings. These documents and the rare old books, newspapers and magazines and the various relics bearing on local, state and national history are carefully preserved. The Club proposes to print a complete catalogue of the Archives after a building sufficiently large for the better protection and handling of its belongings has been procured. Not until then can the documents and other material be made more conveniently accessible to students and exhibited more advantageously to the public.
